

Deceptive Decisions by Jheff

Everyone makes decisions. We make a dozen decisions every day. We make hundreds of decisions every week. Those decisions are made based on a variety of factors. If we could control those factors, then we can control decisions. And that's exactly what routine will prove.

Deceptive Decisions is a new revised version of one of Jheff's favorite and most requested close-up routines. Previously, it was printed in both Jheffsmind and Parimental. This version has an entirely new presentation and some added nuances and subtleties.

Here's what happens: One colored marker chip is chosen (red, yellow, or blue) and placed on any one of five cards which represent the topics of concerns that people make decisions on every day: Travel, Love, Health, Money, and Family.

Then, one of two messages is revealed that reveals the performer controlled the choice of the color of the chosen chip. A number is now chosen. It can truly be any number. The chip is moved from one card to another that number of times. The participant can switch the direction of the chip at any time.

No matter which card it's placed on, which number is chosen, or how many times the direction is switched... the second message reveals the identity of the card the chip ends on.

The package includes the small pay envelope, the five cards, the three different colored chips, and the message cards. There is nothing else.
